

Observations of 125 Recent Bail Requests

Cash Bail in Philadelphia

In Philadelphia, every day, an average of 37 people are assigned cash bail.¹ While the amounts vary, the median bail issued in 2018 was $10,000.²

Meanwhile, more than 3 of every 4 people arrested in Philadelphia live below the poverty line. For someone living in poverty, the $1,000 required for release on a $10,000 bail is unaffordable and serves as a barrier to freedom. Instead of being released and given a court date for their trial, people who cannot afford their bail are sent to a Philadelphia jail where they wait an average of 100 days for their case to conclude. While in jail, people's lives are severely disrupted and forever changed.

The Philadelphia Bail Fund believes strongly that wealth-based detention is wrong. It is a violation of the presumption of innocence to incarcerate a person who has not been convicted of a crime solely on the basis of their income. The Philadelphia Bail Fund advocates that Philadelphia's cash bail system change to one where release before trial is the norm except in the most exceptional instances.

Introduction

In January 2018, District Attorney Larry Krasner entered office in Philadelphia after campaigning to end the injustice of cash bail. On February 21, 2018, District Attorney Krasner released a bail reform policy that required his office's representatives to request immediate release for individuals facing any one of 25 charges, with certain exceptions.³ One year following these reforms, an independent study by George Mason law professor Megan Stevenson and Penn criminology professor Aurelie Ouss showed that this policy did not increase the failure to appear rate nor recidivism, despite the release of more people without bail.⁴ Even with these supportive findings, no new bail reforms have been introduced since the February 2018 policy change.

1. Docket sheet analysis by the Philadelphia Bail Fund showing that between February 21, 2018 and February 17, 2019, 13,474 cases were assigned cash bail.

2. Docket sheet analysis by the Philadelphia Bail Fund showing that between February 21, 2018 and February 17, 2019, the total sum of cash bail assigned was $1,074,153,650, the mean was $64,263 and the median was $10,000.

What we observed

The Philadelphia Bail Fund conducts regular court watching of preliminary arraignment hearings (or “bail hearings”) as part of Philly Bail Watch, in partnership with Pennsylvanians for Modern Courts. In October 2018, we released a report, which included observations from the public on 611 bail hearings revealing that bail was still used excessively in Philadelphia, and proposing recommendations for reform of the process.⁵

Since our Philadelphia Bail Watch report was released in October 2018, all court actors are now using their microphones more regularly during bail hearings. This change is significant. All hearings are conducted via videoconferencing technology where the individual being arraigned is not physically present. Therefore, consistent use of the microphone allows the individual being arraigned to hear the proceeding. The use of microphones also allows the public to hear, which often was not possible previously.

Because of this development, we are now aware of the recommendations for release being given by the District Attorney’s Office and Public Defender representatives. What follows are the key findings from 125 hearings observed by the Philadelphia Bail Fund between March 21 and April 14, 2019.

- Of the 125 observed hearings between March 21 and April 14, 2019, the District Attorney’s Office representatives consistently recommended higher amounts of cash bail than what was ultimately issued by the court magistrate.
- This occurred despite District Attorney Larry Krasner’s public comments that setting unaffordable bail is wrong, and that the practice of cash bail should be eliminated in Philadelphia. It also occurred despite the widespread belief that judge and magistrate resistance prevents the District Attorney’s Office from instituting more progressive decarceral practices.
- For the 125 hearings observed, 74% of accused individuals were perceived as Black, Latino or Asian and 89% were perceived to be men. Of the 125 cases observed, cash bail was issued 35% of the time.⁶

6. These 125 hearings do not represent a statistically significant sample and, therefore, it cannot be assumed that the racial, ethnic and gender breakdown, or the percentage of cash bail issued is representative of all cases.

- Of the 44 cases where cash bail was issued among these observations, in 93% of the cases (41 cases) a public defender or court-appointed attorney was assigned to represent the accused individual due to indigence. Realistically speaking, if the courts find that a person is indigent and unable afford an attorney, any amount of money is likely hold that person in jail or person. We also observed nearly a dozen cases where unemployment or inability to pay cash bail was explicitly stated during the hearing.
- Of the 44 cases where cash bail was issued among these observations, in nearly 70% of the cases (30 cases) the District Attorney's Office representative requested higher bail than what was issued by the magistrate. In another 20% of cases (9 cases), the District Attorney's Office representative did not offer a recommendation or none was heard.
- There was no case observed during this period where the magistrate issued cash bail at an amount higher than what was recommended by the District Attorney's Office representative – in the remaining 5 cases, the magistrate issued cash bail at the amount requested by the District Attorney's Office.
- Cash bail was only set in cases where the District Attorney's Office representative requested it – there was no case observed during this period where the magistrate issued cash bail in the absence of a request for cash bail by the District Attorney's Office representative.
- In every single case observed in which the District Attorney's Office representative requested ROR (Release on Recognize) or SOB (Sign on Bond), those release conditions were assigned; we observed no instance in which the District Attorney's Office representative requested ROR and the magistrate refused to grant it. We did, however, observe two instances in which the District Attorney's Office representative appealed the magistrate's decision to release a person on ROR or SOB. In those two instances, the District Attorney's Office's appeal caused cash bail to be set instead of the magistrate's initial determination that the person should be released without payment.

What does this mean, and why does it matter

- The District Attorney's Office representative consistently recommends higher amounts of cash bail than what is ultimately issued by the court magistrate. In other words, the amount of cash bail recommended by the District Attorney's Office representative is consistently higher than what the courts deem is necessary to ensure a an individual's appearance at court - the only legal purpose of cash bail.

- According to District Attorney Krasner’s public statements,⁷ his office should be requesting the minimal necessary terms of release required in order to ensure appearance at court. However, we find the opposite to be true.
- The District Attorney’s Office representative plays a pivotal role in cash bail determinations. The amount of cash bail that the District Attorney’s Office representative requests matters to the ultimate outcome. It serves as an anchor for the magistrate’s decision – in fact, according to our observations, it serves as a maximum that magistrates are reluctant to exceed. For this reason, the District Attorney’s Office should be held accountable when requesting excessive release conditions.
- However, the District Attorney’s Office representative is not the only responsible party. Court magistrates ultimately decide release conditions for every person who is arrested and goes through a preliminary arraignment hearing. We find that court magistrates are still not following Pennsylvania law,⁸ which states that:
 - Cash bail should not be issued at levels which are unaffordable. We find that this continues to happen every day.
 - Magistrates should issue the minimal necessary terms of release required in order to ensure court appearance. We find that this is not happening for many individuals charged with crimes in Philadelphia.

What follows are the details behind all 125 cases observed by the Philadelphia Bail Fund between March 21 and April 14, 2019. The highlighted information indicates each instance where the District Attorney’s Office representative’s recommendation was higher than what was ultimately assigned by the magistrate.

This information was shared with senior officials in the District Attorney’s Office responsible for bail policy on April 24, 2019. The Office did not provide a response to these findings aside from acknowledging receipt of the information. However, we hope to work with the District Attorney’s Office to change the status quo of District Attorney’s Office representatives in requesting cash bail.

Key Terms

ROR - Release on recognizance

Release conditioned only upon the person's written agreement to appear when required and to comply with the conditions of the bail bond.

SOB - Sign on bond

Release conditioned upon the person's written agreement to be liable for a fixed sum of money if he or she fails to appear as required or fails to comply with the conditions of the bail bond. No money or other form of security is deposited.

AMP - Accelerated Misdemeanor Program

Diversions program for people charged with certain non-violent misdemeanors.

Release on Nonmonetary Conditions

Release conditioned upon the person's agreement to comply with any non-monetary conditions, which the bail authority determines are reasonably necessary to ensure the defendant's appearance and compliance with the conditions of the bail bond. For example, release might be conditioned on the requirement that the person report to pretrial services.
